Another possibility is that the article neutron capture therapy of cancer could be renamed boron neutron capture therapy (deleting that one) and spinning off gadolinium neutron capture therapy as a stub. I don't like that option, as it would be a pretty small stub, and there's a better place for it with this other material, which incorporates most of the same external techniques.

Boron neutron capture therapy Moving toward targeted

,, Barth et al. first reported the application of a mAb for boron delivery systems, using boronated mAb 17-1A in potential neutron capture therapy for colorectal cancer. In other study intended to expand the application of BNCT for the treatment of abdominal cancers, it was attempted to determine whether mAb against alpha-fetoprotein (AFP) could be a useful tool to deliver ^{10}B to AH-66
