Parallel Image Representation We assume a two-dimensional array of PEs, large enough to provides one PE per image pixel. In case of fewer PEs, we can still have one virtual PE per pixel, with the operating system or the compiler taking care of the iteration required. This architecture is reflected in our definition in Program 1. The actual PE field (and image) size is left open to be Most looping devices can do this for you, given that you get several of them and run them in parallel. If the loopers doesn't provide a convenient way of fading volume and panning stereo position you may also need a mixer i order to do that.
